ABSTRACT

An interface device for interfacing a user's input with a computer includes: a mechanical input device to transform a mechanical input operation of the user into an input signal for input into the computer. The mechanical input device has a movable element that the user moves to perform the input operation. An electrical generator, mechanically coupled to the moveable element, generates electrical energy that charges a battery. The battery powers circuitry used for deriving the input signal.